

Court Reporting

an exciting, flexible career choice

The demand for court reporters continues to soar as legal cases crowd the courts. Those trained with stenography skills are not only highly valued by attorneys and the court system, but also essential to broadcasting companies who are required by law to have television programming closed-captioned for the 28 million Americans who are deaf or hard-of-hearing. Schools and businesses also rely on trained court reporters for "real-time" capturing and transcripts of lectures, speeches and meetings.

The Department of Labor reports that court reporting job openings continue to outnumber jobseekers. The field offers great benefits, such as flexible schedules, exciting work environments and financial security. Opportunities in this profession are endless—court reporters can travel or work remotely from home. Forbes.com included court reporting among its report of "Surprising Six-Figure Jobs," noting a national median salary of $62,000 annually, "though it tops $100,000 in many cities."

Orleans Technical Institute provides an Associate in Specialized Business (ASB) degree program in court reporting, and is the only school in the tri-state region that is approved according to the high standards of the National Court Reporters Association. The school has a brand new campus in Northeast Philadelphia, just minutes from Montgomery County.

Graduates are prepared to record trial proceedings, depositions, conventions, board meetings, live television broadcasts, college classes—any occasion where speech must be captured as it is spoken.

Discover why a career in court reporting is vital, exciting, and rewarding, with coast-to-coast opportunities at your fingertips. Call Orleans Technical Institute at 215-728-4700 or visit www.orianstech.edu. September classes are enrolling now.

Orleans is operated by JEVS Human Services, a not-for-profit organization that provides a broad range of employment and training programs that help people across the Greater Philadelphia community achieve their personal and career goals.

